There Is Hope of Doing Perfect Research

Although most scholars strongly subscribe to the position that "There is no hope of doing perfect research" (Griffith, 1998, p97), I believe there is hope of doing perfect research. After reading his argument carefully, I cannot find so much difference between Griffith's position and the traditional perspective of science; that scientific knowledge is cumulative. Griffith argues that an abacus, which preceded what we call computers today, was a product of imperfect research. This paper argues
