Brief History of Communism According to the CIA Julian Bull, Many formerly classified CIA documents show very clearly that communism is radically humanistic There is a clear acknowledgement of quite dramatic improvements to the quality of life and standard of living of the population Rapid economic and wage growth reduction in the cost of living and unemployment rates dramatic improvements to the standards of health education social political and economic equality the status of women oppressed ethnic and racial groups etc All the major Communist countries in the world started out at the time of their revolutions as relatively poor largely feudal societies Within a few decades they transformed themselves into innovative modern technologically advanced and prosperous societies The capitalist elite have very strong motives for slandering Socialism and vastly disproportionate access to the mediums with which to spread these lies Privately within their own secret intelligence documents the Capitalist elite need very accurate and reliable information so that they can understand and destroy their enemy No Communist party has successfully created a Utopia none of them even claim to have achieved this However they have massively improved the lives of the people they represent without it coming at the expense of people in foreign countries Their enormous achievements are embarrassing to the rulers of the Capitalist world
