five days after the fatal shooting of Michael Brown ignited race riots throughout the city of Ferguson Missouri the nation found an unlikely hero in Captain Ron Johnson of the Missouri Highway Patrol Charged with the Herculean task of restoring peace between a hostile African American community and the local police Johnson a 30 year law enforcement veteran and an African American did the unthinkable he took off his bullet proof vest and joined the protesters The 13 days and nights that followed were the most trying of Johnson's life professionally emotionally and spiritually Officers in his own command called him a traitor Lifelong friends stopped speaking to him The media questioned and criticized his every decision Alone at the center of the firestorm with only his family and his faith to cling to Johnson persevered in his belief that the only way to effectively bridge the divide between black and blue is to literally walk across it In 13 Days in Ferguson Johnson shares for the first time his view of what happened during the thirteen turbulent days he spent stabilizing the city of Ferguson and the extraordinary impact those two historic weeks had on his faith his approach to leadership and on what he perceives to be the most viable solution to the issues of racism and prejudice in America
