By: H. G. Wells* H. G. Gotch with Gotch's own whip in a fury after the local landowner insolently orders him off his land. Distraught to think mistakenly that he has killed a man, he returns to the village to find the vicar's house in flames. Delia, the serving girl, has entered the burning building in an attempt to rescue the angel's violin. This extraordinary act comes as a revelation to the angel. Then in a flash he saw it all: this grim little world of battle and cruelty transfigured in a splendour that outshone the Angelic Land, suffused suddenly and insupportably glorious with the wonderful light of Love and Self-Sacrifice. The angel attempts to rescue Delia; someone seems to see two figures with wings flash up and vanish among the flames, and a strange music that began and ended like the opening and shutting of a door suggests that the angel has gone back to where he came from, accompanied by Delia. An epilogue reveals that there is nothing beneath the two white crosses in Siddermorton cemetery that bear the names of Thomas Angel and Delia Hardy, and that the vicar, who never recovered his aplomb after the angel's departure, died within a year of the fire. Herbert George Wells (21 September 1866 – 13 August 1946), usually referred to as H. G. Wells, was an English writer. He was prolific in many genres, writing dozens of novels, short stories, and works of social commentary, satire, biography, and autobiography, including even two books on war games.
