A boat goes forward only when the crew row together Proverb The worst hurricane for over a century devastated the south coast of England in 1866 during a period when emergency services were in their infancy In the town of Poole Dorset the newly appointed lifeboat is launched twice to aid the numerous stricken ships in the vicinity but unaccountably fails to save many lives Many sailors are drowned as a result In an era when gallantry and self sacrifice were expected the lifeboatmen are publicly accused of cowardice by the Mayor and local dignitaries It is in this atmosphere of suspicion and blame that lifeboat coxswain Richard Stokes finds himself tasked with overcoming a prevailing sense of pessimism and creating a viable team which will be ready for the next maritime emergency Achieved by recognising the weaknesses that lie within both his crew and himself he endeavours to take the sometimes painful steps to put them right In this task he is assisted by the unlikely duo of a retired naval captain and a local rector In a divided community battered by the rages of the sea relationships and loyalties are tested in dramatic style When an opportunity eventually presents itself for the lifeboatmen to test their mettle they are prepared to put all plans in action and present a courageous front In violent seas they are called to a treacherously unstable wreck with forty three men trapped on board Will Richard and his men be able to save all souls on board and redeem past mistakes or will this be yet another opportunity for the community to blast their efforts and deem their services dangerously insufficient This fast paced true story portrays an authentic evocation of nineteenth century Poole on the brink of great change With the Royal National Lifeboat Service being such a characteristic feature of sea life around the shores of the United Kingdom this portrayal of its origin looks set to appeal widely

AUTHOR Dr Simon Wills is a genealogist and journalist and a regular contributor to Family Tree Your Family History Family History Monthly and others He writes mainly about history and maritime genealogy and he has a special interest in health and disease in the past He also works as an information specialist writer and advisor to the National Health Service and other healthcare organisations
