Wood Wilson Biochemistry:

Biochemistry of microbial degradation Colin Ratledge, 2012-12-06 Life on the planet depends on microbial activity The recycling of carbon nitrogen sulphur oxygen phosphate and all the other elements that constitute living matter are continuously in flux microorganisms participate in key steps in these processes and without them life would cease within a few short years The comparatively recent advent of man made chemicals has now challenged the environment where degradation does not occur accumulation must perforce take place Surprisingly though even the most recalcitrant of molecules are gradually broken down and very few materials are truly impervious to microbial attack Microorganisms by their rapid growth rates have the most rapid turn over of their DNA of all living cells Consequently they can evolve altered genes and therefore produce novel enzymes for handling foreign compounds the xenobiotics in a manner not seen with such effect in other organisms Evolution with the production of micro organisms able to degrade molecules hitherto intractable to breakdown is therefore a continuing event Now through the agency of genetic manipulation it is possible to accelerate this process of natural evolution in a very directed manner The time scale before a new microorganism emerges that can utilize a recalcitrant molecule has now been considerably shortened by the application of well understood genetic principles into microbiology However before these principles can be successfully used it is essential that we understand the mechanism by which molecules are degraded otherwise we shall not know where best to direct these efforts Commencement
