

4. Heat Exchanger

4-1 Heat exchanger construction

The heat exchanger cools the hot fresh water that has cooled the inside of the engine with sea water.

The inside of the heat exchanger cooling pipe consists of 36 small dia. tubes and baffle plates.

The sea water flows through the small dia. tubes and the fresh water flows through the maze formed by the baffle plates.

There is a reservoir at the bottom of the cooling pipe which serves as the fresh water tank. There is an exhaust water passageway (line) in the reservoir which forms a water cooled exhaust gas manifold.

The filler cap on top of the heat exchanger has a pressure valve, which lets off steam through the overflow pipe when pressure in the fresh water system exceeds the specified value. It also takes in air from the overflow pipe when pressure in the fresh water systems drops below the normal value.
