Hansen,2020-08-01 Follow a gray whale from its summer feeding grounds off the coast of Alaska to its winter birthing grounds in the warmer waters off of Mexico This giant mammal will delight readers as will the photos and exciting information and migration route map Aligned to Common Core Standards and correlated to state standards Abdo Kids Jumbo is an imprint of Abdo Kids a division of ABDO Migrating Eastern North Pacific Gray Whale Behavior Compared Over Multiple Timescales Regina Anne Guazzo,2018 Mysticetes baleen whales often make long annual migrations from high latitude summer feeding areas to low latitude wintering areas Eastern North Pacific gray whales Eschrichtius robustus migrate within a few kilometers from shore for most of their route from summer feeding areas in the Bering Chukchi and Beaufort Seas to wintering areas in the lagoons along the south western coast of the Baja California Peninsula in Mexico This dissertation combines passive acoustic recordings infrared camera video and visual sightings to investigate gray whale behavior and how it changes across different timescales I use a four element hydrophone array in central California to present the first published full season acoustic monitoring and tracking of migrating gray whales I describe the characteristics of calls produced by migrating gray whales and analyze how these characteristics change due to propagation I show that gray whale behavior changes on diel and seasonal timescales Notably gray whales increase their vocalizations at night but their mean swimming behavior does not change contrary to previous assumptions used in population size estimates Over seasonal timescales vocalizing gray whale swimming behavior aligns with previous observations I explore how passive acoustic and infrared camera monitoring can help quantify whales by calculating cue rates or call and blow rates for migrating gray whales Acoustic calling rates indicate that the gray whale population size is greater than estimated using visual sightings alone and that calling rate increases over the southbound migration Infrared camera blow rates are less affected by whale behavior and are useful for daytime and nighttime monitoring but are limited by visibility and distance To understand gray whale behavior over seven migration seasons I use visual daily counts at two sites and single hydrophone call detections which indicate that migratory behavior seems to be driven more by intrinsic than the tested environmental factors I find that the proportion of the population using a coastal route through the Southern California Bight especially past Los Angeles increased over these years Understanding the behavior of migrating gray whales will help improve abundance estimates and determine how these whales may be impacted by nearshore anthropogenic activities and climate change
