Baxter. Abridged by Benjamin Fawcett ... The Fourth Edition Richard Baxter, 1784 The Eternal Happiness of the Saints Cardinal Bellarmine, Brother Hermenegild, 2014-11-06 Towards the end of his life Saint Robert Bellarmine composed himself a little retreat for his own spiritual benefit so that he might find the eternal happiness of the saints Let us also profit from his sage considerations and meditations Saint Robert Bellarmine writes This name is continually occurring in the Holy Scripture The abode of the saints in heaven is called a Paradise because it is a most beautiful place abounding in delights But because men might suppose that paradise was a garden placed near a house which could contain but few people the Holy Spirit has added the name House because it is a royal mansion a great palace wherein besides a garden there are halls couches and many other excellent things But because a house however large cannot contain many people and lest we should think that very few will possess eternal life the Scripture adds the word City which contains many gardens and many palaces But since St John speaking of the number of the blessed saith After this I saw a great multitude which no man could number And as moreover no city can contain an innumerable multitude the word Kingdom is used to which is added the kingdom of heaven than which no place in the whole universe is more boundless and extensive But again since in a most extensive kingdom there are many who never see each other nor know their names nor whether they ever existed and since it is certain that all the blessed behold each other and know each other and converse familiarly with one another as friends and relations therefore the Scriptures not content with the name of Kingdom added that of a City that we might know its inhabitants are truly citizens of the saints and as familiar and as closely united together as the inhabitants of the very smallest city But in order that we might likewise remember that these happy men are not only citizens of the saints but also friends of God therefore the Holy Spirit calls that a House which it also named a City In fine because all the blessed in heaven abound in delights it is likewise called Paradise Hence these four words Kingdom House City Paradise mean one and the same thing and the Paradise is so extensive that it can truly be called a House City and Kingdom Wherefore concerning this most blessed place I will first under the word Kingdom then under that of a City afterwards under that of a House and lastly under the word Paradise meditate in the chamber of my heart and with God s assistance commit to writing what He shall please to suggest unto me The saints' everlasting rest; or, A treatise of the blessed state of the saints in ... heaven, abridged by B. Fawcett Richard Baxter, 1830 The Saints' Everlasting Rest ; Or, A Treatise of the Blessed State of the Saints in Their Enjoyment of God in Heaven Richard Baxter, 1844 The Saint's Everlasting Rest Richard Baxter, 1819
