Wishbone A Memoir In Fractures:

Wishbone Julie Marie Wade, 2014-11-24 For a long time everything only happened to other people Julie Wade writes Or so she thought She records her falls The stunned body the purloined speech she experiences after crashing to the ground from a swing The sensation of slipping from the platform saddle atop a circus elephant sliding flat as a penny against his wrinkled skin rattling the bones of my ribs The shame and uncertainty of being spilled from the security of parental love And finally triumphantly the felix culpa the fortunate fall of love Juxtaposed against the fragmentary structure of the memoir this fall comprises both the energy source the burning center of the book and its thematic vantage point Falling in love is an explosion in Julie's mind as well as her body an epiphany that remakes the map of her world slicing the knot of her parents' shame unmasking the visceral truths of her body In love she is in motion reimagining the past striking out on road trips Suddenly she is living grabbing tasting writing her mouth full of honey and moonlight her mind afire And we are reminded yes this is what love does this is how it saves us Julie Wade has received the Oscar Wilde Poetry Prize 2005 the Literal Latte Nonfiction Award 2006 the AWP Intro Journals Award for Nonfiction 2009 the American Literary Review Nonfiction Prize 2010 the Arts Letters Nonfiction Prize 2010 the Thomas J Hruska Nonfiction Prize 2011 the Lambda Literary Award for Lesbian Memoir 2011 and seven Pushcart Prize nominations
