The Way We Live Now Controversies Of The 90s:

The New Inheritors Madeleine Mattarozzi Laming, 2012-12-20 This groundbreaking book examines why the majority of Australian school leavers want to go to university and have resisted government attempts to promote alternative forms of tertiary education The New Inheritors explores differences in young people's understanding of the purpose of university and their reasons for wanting to enrol The book reveals that although there has been a general shift in values towards the utilitarian perspective there is still significant support for the traditional liberal idea of university education as a cultural experience This support is concentrated in well educated families regardless of their financial resources but there is a substantial number of young people from less well educated families who have absorbed the liberal perspective The book begins with an extensive and unique overview of changes in Australian federal government tertiary education policy and changes in the public discourse on education This overview provides a framework against which differences among today's students are examined in detail Drawing on a study of over 200 secondary school students from diverse backgrounds The New Inheritors records their attitudes to university including access fees and the role of government and explores how these are formed by their family backgrounds and influenced by public policy on education The New Inheritors uncovers the complexity of young people's attitudes and what processes occur in the forming and reforming of those attitudes to university and what young people really want from university education Dr Madeleine Mattarozzi Laming is a Lecturer in Education at Australian Catholic University She has given numerous conference papers on transition from school to university and teaching students from diverse backgrounds In 2011 she received an Australian Learning and Teaching Council Citation for an outstanding contribution to student learning particularly at the first year

The Future Once Happened Here Fred Siegel,2010-10 In The Future Once Happened Here Fred Siegel tells an incredible story about the fate of America's most influential cities New York Washington D C and Los Angeles Standing as metaphors for America's urban life because of their stature as nerve centers of the nation these three cities once celebrated for their excitement and creativity as well as their ability to incorporate immigrants and solve the nation's problems were all caught up in the social policies born in the 60s and 70s and as a consequence faltered badly in dealing with the politics of race and the quality of their residents' lives in the 80s and 90s Each of Siegel's three urban portraits shows the desperate remedies undertaken by cities searching for a lifeline back to the future whose promise they once seemed to embody In a narrative that acknowledges the large historical forces that have remade the face of America over the last three decades but insists that social policies are not merely foregone conclusions waiting to happen Siegel holds up a mirror to our urban nature and tells us much about the way we live now much more than a metaphor as the process of medicalizing adolescence intensified by the 1990s with parenting books containing neuro scientific warnings about the incomplete and volatile teen brain Undertaking a cultural history of youth that combines disability queer feminist and comparative media studies Elman offers a provocative new account of how American cultural producers policymakers and medical professionals have mobilized discourses of disability to cast adolescence as a treatable condition By tracing the teen s uneven passage from postwar rebel to 21st century patient Chronic Youth shows how teenagers became a lynchpin for a culture of perpetual rehabilitation and neoliberal governmentality
