Understanding The Process Of Aging Understanding The Process Of Aging:

The Biology of Aging Ray Arters, Aging represents one of the most fundamental and universal biological processes yet it remains one of the most complex and poorly understood phenomena in the life sciences At its core aging involves the progressive decline in physiological function and increase in mortality risk that occurs with advancing chronological age manifesting as reduced cellular repair mechanisms accumulation of molecular damage and increased susceptibility to disease and death This process affects virtually all living organisms from single celled bacteria to complex multicellular organisms though the rate and pattern of aging varies dramatically across species and even among individuals within the same species Understanding the biology of aging requires examining multiple levels of organization from molecular mechanisms that control cellular senescence to evolutionary forces that shape lifespan and aging patterns across different species The evolutionary basis of aging presents a fascinating paradox that has puzzled biologists for over a century From a purely adaptive perspective aging appears counterproductive as natural selection should favor organisms that can survive and reproduce indefinitely However the universal occurrence of aging across diverse life forms suggests that this process is not merely an accident of biology but rather emerges from fundamental constraints and trade offs inherent in living systems Several evolutionary theories have been proposed to explain why aging evolved and persists despite its apparent disadvantages for individual fitness The mutation accumulation theory proposes that aging results from the accumulation of deleterious mutations that have effects only late in life when the force of natural selection is weak due to declining reproductive value and increasing extrinsic mortality This theory suggests that genes with harmful effects expressed only in old age can persist in populations because they are effectively invisible to natural selection which operates primarily on traits affecting survival and reproduction during the reproductive years The strength of selection declines with age because fewer individuals survive to express late acting genes and those that do survive have lower reproductive value

Johnson-Carter,2017-10-07 Each and everyday we are all growing older If we are lucky we will keep growing older for a long time Getting older doesn t have to be a uninspiring experience aging can actually be quite the contrary The ABC s of Aging will teach you how to embrace the process of aging and help you understand how you can turn the Golden Years into your BEST YEARS of your life Our Future Selves National Advisory Council on Aging (U.S.). Panel on Biomedical Research,1978 The goal of biomedical research on aging is to prolong the useful and active lives of the elderly and to raise the quality of their lives That can be accomplished if we understand the normal process of aging the nature of diseases common to the aged and the sources of and remedies for many of the painful disabilities suffered by the aged The major systems within the body fail at different rates depending upon the inherited characteristics and environmental experiences of the individual One goal of biomedical research is to characterize for the various organ systems of the body the progressive loss of functions with age Biomedical research on aging can be divided into three major areas basic biological aspects of aging the interaction of aging and disease and the interaction of external or environmental influences and aging Important elements in research on aging include experimental model systems the study of human populations studies of alteration of life span and resources and training needs

Müller,2012-12-06 Experimental gerontopsychology attempts to test causal hypotheses about old age related behavioral changes by the manipulation of age differences An experimental treatment is introduced with the purpose of equating different age groups with respect to a potentially relevant function If the treatment results in an assimilation of the behavior of the different age groups age by treatment interaction differences in this function are considered as causal for the normally observed behavioral difference If it does not result in an assimilation of the behavior of the different age groups main effect of treatment differences in this function are considered as irrelevant for the normally observed behavioral difference The different interpretations of age by treatment interactions and main effects of treatment in this kind of research are reasonable only if the experimental treatment actually results in an equalization of the age groups with respect to the function of interest. As is shown, such a functional equalization can neither be demonstrated nor assumed in many cases. In such cases, studies with either age group can be used to investigate hypotheses about potential causes for old age related behavioral changes. Studies with young subjects having important advantages over studies with old subjects. A test of causal relationships by age by treatment interactions is possible in cases where the experimental treatment evidently results in an equalization of the age groups with respect to the function in question. Unfortunately, the field of application for this kind of approach is rather limited. The International Journal of Aging & Human Development, 2001 Illinois Register, 1987
