

The Treaty of Versailles, 1919

In June 1919, Germany was presented with the terms of the Treaty of Versailles. Although the fighting had stopped the war would not end until they signed. Germany was in no position to restart the fighting. The British Navy had blockaded Germany's ports to stop food supplies from being imported. This was a way of making sure that the German army could not restart the war. However, it was the civilians who suffered the most. With the food ships unable to reach their ports many Germans were slowly starving to death. In 1918, alone 300,000 Germans starved to death! The German government had no choice but to sign it.

The Treaty of Versailles or (behaviour contract) is summarised below:

Source A: The terms of the Treaty of Versailles, 1919

Source B: Mr RJ Huggins, 1991

The two most serious changes to Germany were the following:

1. Military

The Rhineland was demilitarised, in other words Germany was not allowed to have any troops in that area. The Germany army was limited to a 100,000 men and they were not allowed to have an air force, submarines or any capital ships.

2. War guilt

Germany was blamed for having started the war and forced to pay reparations (compensations). The amount was settled in 1921 at £6.6 Billion.
