Freeman, 2020-12-01

Women of Discriminating Taste examines the role of historically white sororities in the shaping of white womanhood in the twentieth century. As national women's organizations, sororities have long held power on college campuses and in American life. Yet the groups also have always been conservative in nature and inherently discriminatory, selecting new members on the basis of social class, religion, race, or physical attractiveness. In the early twentieth century, sororities filled a niche on campuses as they purported to prepare college women for ladyhood. Sorority training led members to comport themselves as hyperfeminine, heterosocially inclined, traditionally minded women following a model largely premised on the mythical image of the southern lady. Although many sororities were founded at non-southern schools and also maintained membership strongholds in many non-southern states, the groups adhered to a decidedly southern aesthetic, a modernized version of Lost Cause ideology in their social training to deploy a conservative agenda. Margaret L. Freeman researched sorority archives, sorority-related materials in student organizations, as well as dean of women's student affairs and president's office records collections for historical data that show how white southerners repeatedly called upon the image of the southern lady to support southern racial hierarchies. Her research also demonstrates how this image could be easily exported for similar uses in other areas of the United States that shared white southerners' concerns over changing social demographics and racial discord. By revealing national sororities as significant players in the grassroots conservative movement of the twentieth century, Freeman illuminates the history of contemporary sororities, difficult campus relationships, and their continuing legacy of discriminatory behavior and conservative rhetoric.

Material Setting and Reform Experience in English

Institutions for Fallen Women, 1838-1910 Susan Woodall, 2023-09-25. Tracing the history of four English case studies, this book explores how, from outward appearance to interior furnishings, the material worlds of reform institutions for fallen women reflected their moral purpose and shaped the lived experience of their inmates. Various, known as asylums, refuges, magdalens, penitentiaries, Houses of Mercy, the goal of such institutions was the moral rehabilitation of unmarried but sexually experienced fallen women. Largely from the working classes, such women, some of whom had been sex workers, were represented in contradictory terms. Morally tainted and a potential threat to respectable family life, they were also worthy of pity and in need of saving from further sin. Fuelled by rising prostitution rates from the early decades of the nineteenth century, the number of moral reform institutions for fallen women expanded across Britain and Ireland. Through a programme of laundry, sewing work, and regular religious instruction, the period of institutionalisation and moral re-education of around two years was designed to bring about a change in behaviour, readying inmates for economic self-sufficiency and re-entry into society in respectable domestic service. To achieve their goal, institutional authorities deployed an array of ritual, material, religious, and disciplinary tools with mixed results.

White Sororities and the Cultural Work of Belonging Charlotte Hogg, 2023-12-19. Charlotte Hogg takes a close look through the example of White university sororities at how we create and cling to subcultures through the notion of belonging and how spoken and unspoken rhetorics contribute to this notion.

Renewed calls to end Greek letter organizations for racism and sexism including increased scrutiny on White women's social justice failings have intensified But as Hogg shows rhetorics of belonging have always occurred amid and even in response to anti GLO sentiment She shows how rhetorical efforts by members for members foster belonging for insiders while also seeking to appease those on the outside In her analysis Hogg positions the study of rhetoric beyond traditional methods of persuasion to show how we communicate and participate in communities as citizens in subtle ways beyond speaking and writing Through engaging narrative drawing on her experiences as a member of a White sorority archival research and interviews with collegians and alumni she shows how efforts toward belonging can influence particular beliefs about womanhood in complex ways This thought provoking volume will interest scholars and students from a range of disciplines including rhetoric and communication studies gender studies feminism sociology cultural anthropology and history
