Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus is a leading cause of nosocomial infection. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the hospital environment. A total of 100 samples were collected from the hospital environment, including 50 from the intensive care unit (ICU) and 50 from the general ward. The results showed that the prevalence of S. aureus was 60% in the ICU and 40% in the general ward. The study also found that the majority of the isolates were susceptible to all antibiotics tested, except for methicillin. These findings suggest that the hospital environment is a significant source of S. aureus infection, and that the use of antibiotics should be carefully monitored to prevent the development of resistance.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, increase muscle strength, and reduce body fat. The results of the study showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the participants. The participants showed a significant increase in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and a significant decrease in body fat. Additionally, the participants reported a significant improvement in their mood and a decrease in their stress levels. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective way to improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
