Viral Infections Of The Nervous System S:

The Mechanisms of Neuronal Damage in Virus Infections of the Nervous System Georg Gosztonyi, 2013-04-17 It has been recognized that viruses can induce neuronal damage by a variety of mechanisms This volume summarizes for the first time the various ways that neurons can degenerate under the influence of viral infection ranging from acute necrosis and virus induced apoptosis to chronic damage in persistent infections The mechanisms of neuronal latency are dealt with as well The volume also includes chapters that review the chronic damage caused by viral proteins that interfere with differentiated functions of the neuron including signaling by neurotransmitters and signal transduction by trophic factors Other chapters deal with the controversial role of cellular immune reactions which may be helpful in controlling infection but may also be detrimental to the host nervous system The specific mechanisms of damage involved in retroviral infections and in prion diseases of the nervous system are reviewed and finally how autoimmune diseases can lead to neuronal damage association with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome AIDS The enormous research efforts in this field have been directed toward understanding the nature of the virus and toward its elimination through preventive vaccination and the cure of the disease Human T cell leukemia virus HTLV I was the first member of the human retrovirus family to be discovered It was implicated as the cause of adult T cell leukemia ATL even before the association of HIV and AIDS was established Research on HTLV I has however been lagging behind that of HIV because of the importance of AIDS Today HTLV I and possibly closely related HTLV II are associated with a variety of human neurologic diseases and research activities in this field may show that human retroviruses can cause a variety of human diseases in addition to those affecting the nervous system Papers in this volume attempt to acquaint the reader with the present state of research into retrovirus infection and related diseases of the nervous system

Central Nervous System Diseases and Inflammation Thomas E. Lane, Monica Carson, Conni Bergmann, Tony Wyss-Coray, 2007-12-24 Up until approximately 20 years ago the idea that the central nervous system CNS and components of the immune system were dynamically interactive was considered impossible or at least highly unlikely as the CNS was judged an immunosuppressive environment based upon experimental evidence highlighting the survival of tissue grafts within the brain Additional evidence supporting this viewpoint included i the presence of the blood brain barrier BBB which provides a physical and physiological obstruction that is difficult for cells and macromolecules to cross ii the relative absence of MHC class I and II expression on

CNS cells like astrocytes and neurons and iii lack of abundant antigen presenting cells APC which are required for the generation of an adaptive immune response However in spite of these obstacles it is now well accepted that the CNS is routinely subject to immune surveillance under both normal as well as diseased conditions Indeed activated cells of the immune system such as T and B lymphocytes and monocyte macrophages readily infiltrate and accumulate within the CNS following microbial infection injury or upon development of autoimmune responses directed toward resident antigens of the CNS
