

POLITICAL ADVERTISING AND ELECTION RESULTS

- studying how political ads influence people's behavior.
- findings show that while political ads don't really change how many people vote overall, they do have a noticeable impact on which candidates people vote for.
 - o if there's more advertising for a particular party, that party tends to get more votes.
- even though ads might not change people's opinions much, they can still increase a candidate's chance of winning by bringing their supporters to the polls.
 - o findings raise concerns about how big donors, like super PACs, can influence elections by spending lots of money on ads.
 - o here may be issues with campaign finance regulations, especially after the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision allowed unlimited donations to these groups.

Press Coverage and Political Accountability

- this study looks at how media coverage affects what people know about their representatives in the U.S. House of Representatives, what those representatives do, and the policies they support.
- congruence: how well newspaper markets match up with districts. If a newspaper's readership aligns well with a district, it's more likely to cover representatives from that district.
 - o areas with higher Congruence tend to have more newspaper coverage of their representatives.
- when the local press covers a representative less, people are less likely to remember their representative's name or describe and rate them.
 - o representatives who receive less press coverage tend to do less work for their constituents, such as participating in hearings or voting against their party's positions.
 - o areas with lower press coverage of representatives tend to receive less federal spending.
- a small increase in media coverage can have significant effects, like improving voter knowledge and increasing politician's activities.
- media coverage plays a crucial role in holding politicians accountable and influencing political decisions.
- changes in media trends, like the rise of the internet, could affect this dynamic, potentially reducing voter information and political accountability.

The Political Legacy of Entertainment TV

- how entertainment television in Italy influenced politics, specifically focusing on Berlusconi's commercial TV network, Mediaset, introduced in the early 1980s
- early exposure to entertainment TV influenced voting patterns. People in areas with early access to Mediaset were more likely to support Berlusconi's party, even decades later.
 - o exposure to entertainment TV as children led to lower cognitive skills and less interest in politics as adults, making them more susceptible to Berlusconi's populist messages. On the other hand, older viewers developed a strong
