

lettering, let me in 5. And one after another, each of the pigs answered (have the kids answer, told by the host an any-chance, oh, oh, oh 5. Imagine saying that when you are the third and only remaining pig after you watched your brothers get eaten! He is no slump, what does he do at the end? (Schuchard answer that he wants the wolf to suggest he come down the chimney and join him for dinner, which ended up being a dinner of wolf because the pig had a pot boiling under the chimney 5

- Give the students a claim/topic: "The Third Little Pig is an admirable character."
- Tell students that when writing it is important to think of the structure to use.
 - For stories, we use sometimes/daily mountains.
 - For essays, we do not use a time/mountain important, you use an outline.
- Introduce the structure:
 - Say, "Take the thesis and come up with your reasons: 'The Third Little Pig is an admirable character because A, because B, and most of all, because C'."
 - Tell to your partner to come up with your 3 reasons.
 -  Meanwhile, begin creating a chart (see pg. 4 in Carlson's book for example).
- Call on students and have them share by giving reasons (make sure to differentiate reasons, various evidence if needed).
- Put all the reasons together to form a thesis.
 - Ex: The Third Little Pig is admirable because he works hard, because he is brave, and because he outwits his enemy.
- Defined by saying: We have a claim and now it's supported, how and bullet's. This is our structure, our plan.
- Tell students they will pour their content into that structure. Say:
 - Imagine what you would write if you had time to do so by writing in the air your first body paragraph (lead off like story-telling).
 - Think of scenes or details from "The Three Little Pigs" that you can use to support, to illustrate, or to give an example of the fact that the third little pig works hard.

 As students are talking, remind them that they will need to write this as a paragraph, not a sentence, so imagine of a detailed story of what the character did or must of done that shows he worked hard.

- Show the template for a body paragraph on chart paper:

One reason why [character] is [lead] is that...

 - For example, A,
 - For example, B,
- Dictate what the first body paragraph might sound like. (See Carlson's pg. 10)
 - Dictate the 2 other "pilot" students used to do:
 1. After citing an example, "inspect" it or analyze how it fits the claim about the Third Little Pig. Ex: This shows... or This illustrates... and then explain how the example fits the claim.
 2. Write a transition that gets you started on the next body paragraph. Ex: Another reason... or Although one reason is... another reason is...
- Tell students to write in the air and do those two things. Remind students to say word for word what he/she would write.
- Reveal the "Boxes-and-Bullets" Essay Structure!
- Defined by summarizing the process that led to:
 1. We started by naming our claim and several supports for it.
 2. In the 1st body paragraph, we repeated the claim and the first way it is supported.
