

Youth in Society.

Introduction.

The concept or the construct of youth in society is very new and has emerged in the post-industrial period. From a sociological point of view, we can look at youth from several perspectives as we try to define the meaning of the youth, as it occurs in society today.

Youth can be viewed from a conflict perspective as the interface of youth and society can lead to tensions and conflicts. Tensions also exist within the category of youth. Class, gender, race; ethnicity and opportunity may not be experienced by all youth in a similar fashion. Youth is also likely to express itself as different, by subscribing to and inventing new distinct and different cultural practices. These sub-cultures or new youth-cultures are often very fluid and constantly developing and may be interfaces of tension and conflict between society and youth.

Youth may also be studied from a functional perspective as both youth and society try to figure out what roles each other play in the modern world. The functionalist roles of education and training can help us to understand how people transit through the youth stage and exit into full participation at a political capital, cultural capital and economic capital level of society. People populating the youth stage of the life cycle will acquire a certain amount of cultural, political and economic capital. This can affect life opportunity and outcomes right across the entirety of subsequent life stages.

Similar to society itself, there are many strata and layers within the concept of youth. This module alone has raised many issues, both historical and contemporary, that make up the concept of youth and how we try to understand and explain it. Youth are involved at all levels of society from culture to sub-culture, from production to consumerism. The part of the course that appealed to me most is the area of work. However I feel to address this properly I will have also have to cut across sections on unemployment, education and class, as I believe all are relevant when we discuss youth and work.

What is youth and how is it defined?

Before writing any essay on the topic of youth, it is important to define what is understood by the term "youth". The UN defines youth as:

"those persons between the ages of 15 and 24 years, without prejudice to other definitions by Member States" (United Nations, Department of Economic and Social affairs 1996)

The UN declares that all its human rights declarations refer to, and include all people in the category of youth. The UN also has many youth specific policies, which are available on its website, www.un.org.

Raymond Williams

Writing In Society Writing In Society:

Writing in Society Raymond Williams, 1983 Raymond Williams's work was always concerned with the relation between culture and society. This book focuses on specific texts and authors exploring the historical and cultural sources of their particular forms of writing. In it Williams examines dramatic form and language in Racine and Shakespeare, the politics of fiction in the English Jacobin novel, David Hume and Charles Dickens, and the changing characteristics of English prose. Robert Tressell's The Ragged Trousered Philanthropists and the role of region and class in the English novel. Also included are Williams's reflections on the rise of English studies on their crisis as the literary traditions of Cambridge University were beset by the structuralist controversy and on the wider implications of this redefinition of the critical field. Writing and Society Florian Coulmas, 2013-02-07 How does writing relate to speech? What impact does it have on social organisation and development? How do unwritten languages differ from those that have a written form and tradition? This book is a general account of the place of writing in society. Drawing on contemporary and historical examples from clay tablets to touchscreen displays, the book explores the functions of writing and written language, analysing its consequences for language, society, economy and politics. It examines the social causes of illiteracy, demonstrating that institutions of central importance to modern society are built upon writing and written texts and are characterised by specific forms of communication. It explores the social dimensions of spelling and writing reform, as well as of digital literacy, a new mode of expression and communication posing novel challenges to the student of language in society. Rus, c.950-1300 Simon Franklin, 2002-08-29 This book provides a thorough survey and analysis of the emergence and functions of written culture in Rus, covering roughly the modern East Slav lands of European Russia, Ukraine and Belarus. Part I introduces the full range of types of writing, the scripts and languages, the materials, the social and physical contexts, ranging from builders' scratches on bricks through to luxurious parchment manuscripts. Part II presents a series of thematic studies of the socio-cultural dynamics of writing in order to reveal and explain distinctive features in the Rus assimilation of the technology. The comparative approach means that the book may also serve as a case study for those with a broader interest either in medieval uses of writing or in the social and cultural history of information technologies. Overall, the impressive scholarship and idiosyncratic wit of this volume commend it to students and specialists in Russian history and literature alike. Awarded the Alec Nove Prize given by the British Association for Slavonic and East European Studies for the best book of 2002 in Russian Soviet or Post Soviet studies.
