

GREAT WHITE SHARKS

The reality about these astounding creatures

South Africa is home to one of the world's most feared sea creatures: Great White Sharks. Most people fall victim to the common misconception that the animals' appearance correlates with their level of aggression towards humans. In reality, it is a rare few animals that only hunt for seals. Hammerhead and the lemon shark conducted a 10 year research study in False Bay, where he monitored the sharks in the wild without physically touching them. He was able to discover how they hunt and how they can be further protected as they are endangered species.

Where do they live?

Most Great White Sharks are concentrated in the areas mentioned in the light shaded region and tend to concentrate in warm waters. Great Whites congregate in False Bay not only because of the warm temperatures, but because there is also a large seal colony that lives on Seal Island. The range extending from the island depicts the range of the seals that leave and return to the island. Seal range is the area where most sharks wait to attack their prey of seals. Ocean provides the ideal hunting conditions because of murky water and limited visibility.

The shark's hunting success rate decreases when it is busy. The more the seal has to defend itself, the more it gets to hunt it.

And how do they hunt?

Facts and characteristics

Great Whites can reach speeds up to 25 MPH when trying to ambush its prey. Big seals are a threat to sharks but due to biting and crushing. A seal can reverse the bite as quickly as a shark.

These sharks are approximately three times as large as a human and the biggest ever recorded was 30ft. Big sharks have more focused and centered vision peaks in order to hunt as they exclude the small sharks from the better spots.

Conservation efforts

Great Whites' biggest threat are humans who hunt them for their fins. The big problem with this is that they reach sexual maturity at 15 years of age and have an 11 month gestation period. This means they can't reproduce as fast as they are being protected. According to the IUCN Red List, some countries including South Africa have implemented laws protecting them from poaching.
