20. David Langrange shares an idea that could help you.

It is estimated that half of the world's population is now living in urban areas, and this trend is expected to continue. The rapid growth of cities has led to a number of environmental problems, including air pollution, water scarcity, and loss of natural habitat. In response, many cities have implemented sustainable development strategies to address these challenges. These strategies often focus on improving public transportation, reducing energy consumption, and increasing green space. By adopting these practices, cities can become more resilient and sustainable in the long term.
