Displaying the Waveform

Here, use the instrument's probe compensation signal (frequency: approx. 1 kHz, amplitude: approx. 1 V, square-wave signal) for the input signal.

- Press AUTO to execute auto setup.

Voltage scale: 500 mV/div

When you execute auto setup, the voltage scale (V/div), time scale (T/div), trigger level, and the like are automatically set to values suitable for the input signal.

* The auto setup feature may not work properly for signals that include a DC component or high-frequency components.

To measure the voltage with high accuracy, adjust the vertical scale so that the input signal is measured with the largest possible amplitude.

Changing the Vertical Axis Settings

Change the vertical scale (voltage sensitivity) from 500 mV/div to 200 mV/div to increase the waveform amplitude. Setting the voltage sensitivity means setting the voltage per grid division (V/div).

- Press OK.

- Use the SCALE knob to change the voltage sensitivity to 200 mV/div.

The waveform is expanded vertically causing a portion of the waveform to go off the screen.

Voltage sensitivity: 200 mV/div

Measurements may not be performed correctly in this condition. Lower the vertical position so that the entire waveform can be seen.

- Use the POSITION knob to move the vertical position down by 2 divisions.

Lowering the vertical position causes the entire waveform to be seen.

Vertical position (—)
The ground level (—) also moves along with the waveform.

For details on the vertical axis, see chapter 1, "Vertical Axis (Analog Signal)," in the Features Guide (IM-DLM5058-01EN).
