love For Turgenev this was clearly not an easy matter he wanted the purity of untarnished love apparently what the French call amities amoureuses erotic but not genital But Sanin is a man how can he resist the passion when the opportunity arises the passion that all of nature calls to action Having been sullied by his actions in his own eyes he flees his Gemma fails to forget and slips into an unsatisfactory existence But Turgenev is kind to us and Sanin because at the end of the novel he allows Sanin to make contact again with Gemma then living in America and to be comforted by her mature forgiveness and learn that her life has been good despite the disaster of Sanin s abandonment Perhaps the hardest of all human experiences is just not knowing
