Abstract—A 10-year retrospective analysis of 100 patients with a diagnosis of anorexia nervosa was conducted. The patients were divided into two groups: 50 patients who had been hospitalized in the psychiatric ward and 50 patients who had been treated in the outpatient clinic. The results showed that the majority of patients in both groups had a history of psychiatric illness, with a high prevalence of comorbid conditions such as depression, anxiety disorders, and obsessive-compulsive disorder. The study also found that the majority of patients had a history of self-harm and suicidal thoughts. The results suggest that a comprehensive approach to the treatment of anorexia nervosa, including both medical and psychological interventions, is necessary for the best outcomes.

Abstract Staphylococcus aureus is a leading cause of nosocomial infections. The pathogen is highly resistant to antibiotics, and its ability to form biofilms on medical devices makes it particularly difficult to treat. In this study, we investigated the effect of a novel antimicrobial peptide, Staphin, on S. aureus biofilm formation. Staphin was found to inhibit biofilm formation in a dose-dependent manner, with higher concentrations leading to greater inhibition. The peptide also disrupted existing biofilms, suggesting its potential as a biofilm eradicator. These findings indicate that Staphin may be a promising agent for the treatment of S. aureus infections, particularly those involving biofilm formation.
