Although the research findings indicate a need for a more comprehensive approach to the management of the elderly, the study also suggests that the current system of care is not entirely inadequate. The study found that the majority of the elderly are still living in their own homes, and that the majority of the elderly are still receiving care from family members. This suggests that the current system of care is still able to provide a certain level of support and care for the elderly. However, the study also found that the majority of the elderly are still living in poverty, and that the majority of the elderly are still receiving care from family members. This suggests that the current system of care is not able to provide a sufficient level of support and care for the elderly. Therefore, the study suggests that a more comprehensive approach to the management of the elderly is needed.
