Before using the compound microscope, you should become familiar with its parts and functions. The microscope consists of a base, arm, eyepiece, objective lenses, stage, and slide. The eyepiece is the lens through which you view the specimen. The objective lenses are the lenses that magnify the specimen. The stage is the platform on which the specimen is placed. The slide is the thin, transparent piece of glass on which the specimen is mounted. The base is the bottom part of the microscope. The arm is the part that holds the eyepiece and objective lenses.

Before using the microscope, read and understand the safety instructions. The microscope is a delicate instrument and should be handled with care. Do not touch the lenses or the stage. Do not use the microscope if it is not properly maintained.
