

Task 1: Identify the components of the system shown in the diagram above.

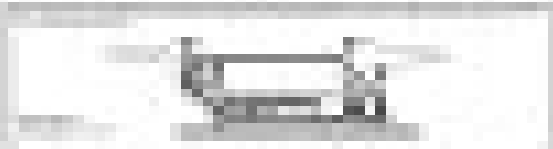

Answer:

- The system consists of four main components: a Sensor, a Controller, an Actuator, and a Process.
- The Sensor measures the output of the Process and sends the data to the Controller.
- The Controller processes the data and sends a control signal to the Actuator.
- The Actuator applies a control action to the Process, which then produces the output.

Task 2: Explain the function of the Controller in the system.

Answer:

The Controller is responsible for comparing the measured output from the Sensor with the desired setpoint. It calculates the error and generates a control signal that is sent to the Actuator to adjust the Process and bring the output back to the setpoint.

Task 3: How does a disturbance affect the system's output?

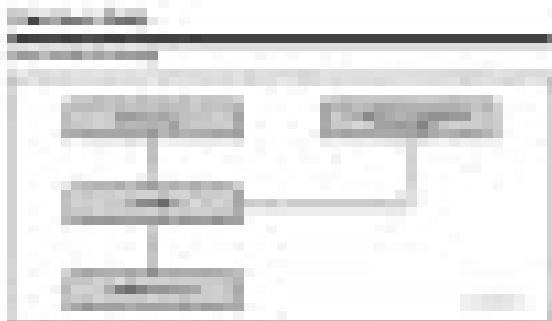

Answer:

A disturbance is an external input that affects the system's output. In the diagram, it is added to the process output before it reaches the sensor. This causes the measured output to deviate from the desired setpoint, which the controller will then attempt to correct.

Task 4: What is the purpose of the Actuator?

Answer:

The Actuator is responsible for applying a control action to the Process based on the signal received from the Controller. It converts the control signal into a physical action that affects the process.

Task 5: What is the advantage of using a feedforward control?

Answer:

Feedforward control can improve the system's response time and reduce the steady-state error by anticipating disturbances. It provides a direct path from the setpoint to the process, bypassing the slower feedback loop.
