not only for the child diagnosed but for the child's peers. Along with highlighting the desire children with special needs have to be included, it reminds us that everyone contributes in their own unique ways. When we practice inclusion, the fun we can have is beyond words. About the Author: Dana Hall is a licensed clinical professional counselor. Her job is to help people to find their voice. When she found out her son was diagnosed with Childhood Apraxia of Speech (CAS) and faced the very real probability that he would never be able to verbally communicate, she felt lost. How could she help him connect to the world? What she did not count on was that he would be teaching her the greatest lesson of all: our connection to each other and to the world is not dependent on any one thing. Not being able to speak out loud did not mean he did not have a voice. After years of speech therapy, it was time for Kindergarten, and the Hall family was nervous. This book chronicles her son's experience with his new friends as they go on new adventures, proving that love and kindness go beyond words. Harry Finds His Voice Evyenia Michellis, 2024-06-25
