

La valeur sûre

Approximately 100,000 to 200,000 people die each year from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), the leading cause of death in the United States. COPD is a chronic lung disease that causes airflow obstruction and is characterized by chronic cough and sputum production. The disease is caused by long-term exposure to irritants, such as cigarette smoke, air pollution, and occupational dusts and chemicals. COPD is a preventable and treatable disease, but many people do not know they have it or do not seek treatment until it is too late. Early diagnosis and treatment can help slow the progression of the disease and improve quality of life. This article discusses the symptoms, diagnosis, and treatment of COPD.
