The Tattooed Lady A History:

The Tattooed Lady Anni Irish, 2011 My thesis discusses the social history of tattooing in America and how this has contributed to a fetishistic attitude of the heavily tattooed female body I focus on two case studies Nora Hildebrandt who was the first professional tattooed woman in America and was active during the turn of the 19th century and Kat Von D who is currently the most recognizably women within the tattoo industry By focusing on these two case studies I was also able to consider the larger cultural and social elements that has contributed to many of the stereotypes of the tattooed female body I consider the social spaces both Hildebrandt and Von D inhabited and how stereotypes surrounding tattooed bodies have contributed to the social attitude of these women's bodies In my thesis I define fetish within the context of media scholar Linda Williams Williams looks at fetishism through the lens of Marx and discusses the way in which bodies have become social commodities Through Williams framework I discuss the ways in which tattooed bodies have become both sites of labor and commodity By becoming tattooed one engages in labor This occurs from the physical stress the body experiences by getting tattooed and also the labor that is being done by the tattoo artist Tattoos then also become a commodity This occurs on two levels because an individual is paying for the service of getting tattooed they become a commodity and by becoming tattooed there is a specific social attitude that is ascribed to them By looking at these elements and also considering the kinds of jobs both women had that were related to the tattoo industry a greater understanding of how tattooed women have come to be socially viewed can start to be had

Stories on Skin Terry Baxter, Libby Coyner-Tsosie, 2025-01-23 Helping expand archival studies into impermanent media like body art this book suggests that archiving must be considered a form of storytelling Tattoos are not merely decorative they contain deep meaning for individuals and communities They document their wearers personal histories and position in families or society and they engage with a communal understanding of symbols This unique book makes the case that archivists who want to preserve as full a human story as possible must recognize the rich documentation provided by tattoos It also argues in a broader sense that traditional archives are not representative of the ways human beings transmit information through time and that they must be augmented by other types of storytelling to provide a more complete record of our species Authors Baxter and Coyner touch on timely topics such as historical narratives storytelling cultural traditions the body as a text social control and memorialization by considering tattoos as a personal and community archive Discussing tattoos as a storytelling tool the authors also challenge how history is kept and who gets included Stories on Skin is committed to the rights of communities to tell their stories in their own way and to the power that right brings
