Charles Neville Buck, 2015-01-10 A creaking complaint of loose and rattling boards rose under the old mountaineer's brogans as he stepped from the threshold to the porch. His eyes, searching the wooded mountain side, held at first only that penetration

which born woodsmen share with the hawk and ferret but presently they kindled into irascibility as well He raised his voice in a loud whoop that went skittering off across the rocky creek bed where Little Slippery crawled along to feed the trickle of Big Slippery ten miles below and the volume of sound broke into a splintering of echoes against the forested crags of the Old Wilderness Ridges
