Transportation Systems Planning Methods And Applications:

Transportation Systems Planning Konstadinos G. Goulias, 2002-12-26 Transportation engineering and transportation planning are two sides of the same coin aiming at the design of an efficient infrastructure and service to meet the growing needs for accessibility and mobility. Many well designed transport systems that meet these needs are based on a solid understanding of human behavior. Since transportation systems are the backbone connecting the vital parts of a city in depth understanding of human nature is essential to the planning design and operational analysis of transportation systems. With contributions by transportation experts from around the world Transportation Systems Planning Methods and Applications compiles engineering data and methods for solving problems in the planning design construction and operation of various transportation modes into one source. It is the first methodological transportation planning reference that illustrates analytical simulation methods that depict human behavior in a realistic way and many of its chapters emphasize newly developed and previously unpublished simulation methods. The handbook demonstrates how urban and regional planning geography demography economics sociology ecology psychology business operations management and engineering come together to help us plan for better futures that are human centered. The text reviews projects from an initial problem statement to final policy action and associated decision making and examines policies at all levels of government from the city to the national levels. Unlike many other handbooks which are encyclopedic reviews Transportation Systems Planning extends far beyond modeling in engineering and economics to present a truly transdisciplinary approach to transportation systems planning.

Transportation Systems Analysis Ennio Cascetta, 2009-08-22 Science is made of facts just as a house is made of bricks but a collection of facts is no more science than a pile of bricks is a house. Henri Poincaré. The aim of the disciplines of praxis is not theoretical knowledge. It is to change the forms of action. Aristotle. Transportation systems consist not only of the physical and organizational elements that interact with each other to produce transportation opportunities but also of the demand that takes advantage of such opportunities to travel from one place to another. This travel demand in turn is the result of interactions among the various economic and social activities located in a given area. Mathematical models of transportation systems represent for a real or hypothetical transportation system the demand, the functioning of the physical and organizational elements, the interactions between them and their effects on the external world. Mathematical models and the methods involved in their application to real large scale systems are thus fundamental tools for evaluating and/or designing actions affecting the physical elements e.g. a new railway and/or organizational components e.g. a new timetable of transportation systems. This book discusses the mathematical models that are used to analyze transportation systems presenting them as the result of a limited number of general assumptions theory It also deals with the methods needed to make these models operational and with their application to transportation system project design and evaluation This field of knowledge is known as transportation systems engineering
