Troubled Hearts, Troubled Minds Peter Nelmes, 2019-09-03 Offers a detailed insight into how children's emotions affect their learning and delivers key lessons on how we can better connect with both the head and the heart during the teaching and learning process How are we to think of the disruptive or destructive child Drawing on over 25 years of working with children with challenging behaviour Peter Nelmes argues that such children are members of a community who are possibly the least recognised understood and accepted in society whose problems are often met with condemnation rather than understanding and support Drawing on a diverse range of case studies he sets out to answer the question as to why emotional difficulties grief trauma and abuse very often diminish a child's capacity for learning By explaining this phenomenon he gives anyone who works with such children a framework for understanding how emotions play out in the classroom and a way of thinking about how the heart and the brain relate to each other in practice If you have ever struggled to teach or even just connect with a troubled child then this book is for you

Autistic Intelligence Douglas W. Maynard, Jason Turowetz, 2022-05-25. An examination of diagnostic processes that questions how we can better understand autism as a category and the unique forms of intelligence it glosses. As autism has grown in prevalence, so too have our attempts to make sense of it. From placing unfounded blame on vaccines to seeking a genetic cause, Americans have struggled to understand what autism is and where it comes from. Amidst these efforts, however, a key aspect of autism has been largely overlooked: the diagnostic process itself. That process is the central focus of Autistic Intelligence. The authors ask us to question the norms by which we measure autistic behavior to probe how that behavior can be considered sensible rather than disordered and to explore how we can better appreciate the individuality of those who receive the diagnosis. Drawing on hundreds of hours of video recordings and ethnographic observations at a clinic where professionals evaluated children for autism, the authors' analysis of interactions among clinicians, parents, and children demystifies the categories, tools, and practices involved in the diagnostic process. Autistic Intelligence shows that autism is not a stable category; it is the outcome of complex interactional processes involving professionals, children, families, and facets of the social and clinical environments they inhabit. The authors suggest that diagnosis, in addition to carefully classifying children, also can highlight or include unique and particular contributions those with autism potentially can make to the world around us.
