

UNIT 18: Personality

1. The personality of a person is the collection of characteristics that make up who they are. It is the set of traits, attitudes, and behaviors that define a person's unique self.

Personality is a complex concept that can be defined in many different ways.

One definition of personality is the collection of traits that make up a person's unique self. Traits are characteristics that are relatively stable and consistent over time. They can be physical, such as height and weight, or psychological, such as intelligence and personality.

Another definition of personality is the collection of behaviors that a person exhibits in different situations. Behaviors are actions that are observable and measurable. They can be physical, such as walking and talking, or psychological, such as thinking and feeling. Behaviors are often influenced by a person's personality.
