

STUDY GUIDE – Genetics – Unit 6

1. The picture below shows transcription involving an operon on a DNA strand. What type of organisms use operons as regulatory mechanisms for protein synthesis? _____

	Glucose Medium	Glucose Medium with Ampicillin	Glucose Medium with Ampicillin and Lactose
Bacterial Strain with added plasmid (+)	#1	#2	#3
Bacterial Strain with no plasmid (-)	#4	#5	#6

A scientist is using an ampicillin-sensitive strain of bacteria that cannot use lactose because it has a nonfunctional gene in the lac operon. She has two plasmids. One contains a functional copy of the affected gene of the lac operon, and the other contains the gene for ampicillin resistance. Using restriction enzymes and DNA ligase, she forms a recombinant plasmid containing both genes. She then adds a high concentration of the plasmid to a tube of the bacteria in a medium for bacterial growth that contains glucose as the only energy source. This tube (+) and a control tube (-) with similar bacteria but no plasmid. They are both incubated under the appropriate conditions for growth and plasmid uptake. The scientist then spreads a sample of each bacterial culture (+ and -) on each of the three types of plates indicated above.

2. Why did the scientist use restriction enzymes in the experiment described above? _____

In the 1940's, Avery, MacLeod, and McCarty transformed non-encapsulated bacteria into encapsulated forms by growing the non-encapsulated cells in a culture containing an extract made from dead encapsulated cells. The transformed cells produced colonies of encapsulated bacteria. Three different procedures and their results are outlined below.

Procedure I:

Extract made from dead encapsulated cells added to culture medium. Non-encapsulated bacteria added to culture medium.

Result: Both non-encapsulated and encapsulated bacteria grow.

Procedure II:

Extract made from dead encapsulated cells treated with protein-degrading enzymes before adding exact to culture medium. Non-encapsulated bacteria added to culture medium.

Result: Both non-encapsulated and encapsulated bacteria grow.

Procedure III:

Extract made from dead encapsulated cells treated with DNase (an enzyme that selectively destroys DNA) before adding extract to culture medium. Non-encapsulated bacteria added to culture medium.

Result: Only non-encapsulated bacteria grow.

3. What conclusion could be made about DNA from the experiment described above? _____
