Micro-clusters and Networks Ewen J. Michael, 2007 This book introduces a new approach to the analysis and management of growth in small tourism markets for regional and rural locations It recognizes from the outset that the vast bulk of the tourism industry's product is delivered by small business enterprises and that many of these are located outside of metropolitan areas Its central premise is that a myriad of small scale clusters can provide an effective means to establish a local competitive advantage in tourism activities based on the resources of existing communities The book brings together contemporary views of the potential of clustering theory to promote development in micro markets within the paradigm of competition to create a new framework for regional development that might serve to enhance the growth of small scale tourism destinations Microclusters and Networks provides a theoretical explanation of how and why micro clusters come about with chapters by specialist authors to illustrate examples of their practice in the real world but it goes further to demonstrate not only why they work but also how community members interact to form successful clusters The incorporation of networking theory provides the means to explain the role of local community interaction in delivering successful social outcomes The analysis that is provided clearly has applications for many industries beyond the development of rural and regional tourism destinations Provides a theoretical explanation of how and why micro clusters come about Brings together contemporary views of the potential of clustering theory to promote development in micro markets Enhances the discussion of rural development policies for tourism by local communities policy analysts and academic researchers

Competitiveness in the Tourism Sector Samuelson Wei-Chiang Hong, 2009-08-29 International tourism is expected to be a major vehicle of economic development in industrializing countries in the 21st century especially for Asia To generate long term growth countries with tourism based economies must develop strategies for employing their comparative advantages to achieve competitive advantages. However, competitiveness in the tourist industry is multi-dimensional and complex. This study evaluates the competitiveness of the Taiwanese tourism sector by a multi-dimensional framework. The theoretical model proposes that the competitiveness of tourist destinations should be composed of Ricardian comparative advantages like the conditions of natural endowments and the degree of technological change, Porterian competitive advantages, tourism management (i.e. providing high quality education and job training, public goods, support services, and reduced transaction costs) to enhance comparative and competitive advantages and environmental conditions.

Micro-Clusters and Networks Ewen Michael, 2006-10-19. This book introduces a new approach to the analysis and management of growth in small tourism markets for regional and rural locations. It recognizes from the outset that the vast bulk of the tourism industry's product is delivered by small business enterprises and that many of these are located outside of metropolitan areas. Its central premise is that a myriad of small scale clusters can provide an effective means to establish a local competitive advantage in tourism activities based on the resources of existing communities. The book brings together contemporary views of the potential of clustering theory to promote development in micro markets within the paradigm of competition to create a new framework for regional development that might serve to enhance the growth of small scale tourism destinations. Microclusters and Networks provides a theoretical explanation of how and why micro clusters come about with chapters by specialist authors to illustrate examples of their practice in the real world but it goes further to demonstrate not only why they work but also how community members interact to form successful clusters. The incorporation of networking theory provides the means to explain the role of local community interaction in delivering successful social outcomes. The analysis that is provided clearly has applications for many industries beyond the development of rural and regional tourism destinations.

Competitiveness in the Tourism Sector Samuelson Wei-Chiang Hong, 2008-04-29. To generate long term growth, countries with tourism based economies must develop strategies for employing their comparative advantages to achieve competitive advantages. Modelling Destination Competitiveness Geoffrey Ian Crouch, 2008 The aim of this study was to develop an insight into the importance and impact of the attributes which shape the competitiveness of tourism destinations Research since the early 1990s has gradually shed light on the nature and structure of destination competitiveness Some of this research has focussed on particular elements of destination competitiveness such as price competitiveness while other research has aimed at developing a more comprehensive understanding of destination competitiveness General theories of competitiveness have been assimilated and adapted and conceptual models of destination competitiveness have been developed which tailors these general ideas and theories to the particular characteristics of the tourism industry As a result destination competitiveness theory has developed to the point that empirical study is now possible and desirable In more recent years the conceptual models have been applied to analyse specific destinations or tourism markets But one of the most pressing research needs is to understand better the relative importance of the attributes of competitiveness Strategies for improving destination competitiveness must make decisions about where and how limited resources should be directed Therefore information which helps to identify which attributes are likely to influence competitiveness most effectively are of considerable value Publisher
