

Summary of Wuthering Heights

By Emily Bronte

"Wuthering Heights" is a novel by Emily Bronte, first published in 1847 under the pen name Ellis Bell. The novel tells the story of Heathcliff, a young orphan boy who is brought to live at Wuthering Heights, a remote and windswept estate on the moors in northern England. Heathcliff is taken in by Mr. Earnshaw, the owner of the estate, and becomes the playmate of his two children, Catherine and Hindley. However, his life at Wuthering Heights is far from happy. Hindley treats him poorly and Catherine, while initially fond of him, eventually rejects him in favor of marrying Edgar Linton, a wealthy neighbor.

The novel is divided into two main parts. The first part is narrated by Mr. Lockwood, a tenant who rents a nearby property from Heathcliff. Lockwood visits Wuthering Heights and becomes intrigued by the story of Heathcliff and his tumultuous past. He becomes close to Nelly Dean, the housekeeper at Wuthering Heights, who tells him the story of Heathcliff's life. The second part of the novel is told from the perspective of Nelly Dean, who narrates the events leading up to the present day.

Heathcliff's life is marked by tragedy and heartbreak. He falls deeply in love with Catherine, but is unable to marry her due to their different social standing. Catherine, in turn, marries Edgar Linton, despite still having feelings for Heathcliff. This sets off a chain of events that ultimately leads to the destruction of several lives. Heathcliff becomes consumed by his love for Catherine and his desire for revenge against those who have wronged him. He marries Edgar's sister, Isabella, purely out of spite, and treats her poorly. Catherine dies after giving birth to a daughter, also named Catherine, and Heathcliff becomes increasingly isolated and unhinged.
