

U.S. Congress

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The U.S. Congress is the legislative branch of the federal government. It is composed of two chambers: the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Senate is made up of 100 members, with two senators from each state. The House of Representatives is made up of 435 members, with the number of representatives from each state determined by population.

Both chambers have the power to pass laws, approve or reject presidential appointments, and impeach federal officials. The Senate also has the power to ratify or reject treaties.

The legislative process begins with a bill being introduced in either chamber. It then moves through a series of committees and votes before reaching the floor for a final vote.

If a bill is passed by both chambers, it goes to the president. The president can sign the bill into law, veto it, or let it become law without a signature.

The U.S. Congress plays a crucial role in shaping the nation's laws and policies. It is a key part of the democratic process and ensures that the interests of all Americans are represented.
