Urban Infrastructure Finance And Management:

Urban Infrastructure Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, 1991 Urban Infrastructure K. Wellman, Marcus Spiller, 2012-07-30 The magnitude of investment the long time frames involved and the influence of pre existing infrastructure on urban infrastructure provision make a co ordinated approach to forward planning policy development and implementation essential There are major challenges in making decisions on urban infrastructure and getting management structures and processes in place Getting it right generates long term dividends getting it wrong involves major costs often borne by taxpayers Urban Infrastructure finance and management is posited on a strong belief that the physical structure of cities and the efficiency of infrastructure services delivered are driven by efficiencies within individual infrastructure sectors lessons learnt across these sectors and the ability to co ordinate and integrate sectors to generate economies of scale This necessitates an interdisciplinary approach integrating knowledge from finance governance planning and management as well as the characteristics of the individual urban infrastructure sectors involved Here it is not only about getting the initial decisions and policy settings right but also ensuring effective implementation A major theme running through the book is the nature of institutions and the governance structures responsible for delivery and management of urban infrastructure and the decision making processes involved The editors have taken a deliberately pragmatic approach to the finance and management of urban infrastructure chapters are cross sectorial and present both theory and practice This book is for students and practitioners in policy planning urban management infrastructure finance and management

Urban Infrastructure Finance from Private Operators Patricia Clarke Annez, 2006 The author examines the role of private participation in infrastructure PPI in mobilizing finance for key urban services that is urban roads municipal solid waste management and water and sanitation since the early 1990s when private participation came to be seen as a key element in infrastructure development Her review indicates that for financing urban services PPI has disappointed playing a far less significant role than was hoped for and which might be expected given the attention it has received and continues to receive in strategies to mobilize financing for infrastructure Looking beyond the number the author examines transactions and finds that there are good reasons practical political economic and institutional for these disappointments Recommending that cities in developing countries try harder is not likely to relieve all these constraints Experience shows that there are a number of features that raise the risk profile of urban infrastructure for private investors which has meant that the bulk of the transactions that have taken place have been exceptions rather than harbingers of a growing trend Many of the measures that could reduce the risk profile are outside the control of many cities others unlikely to change and yet another group of steps to be taken that would improve prospects for urban service provision whether in the hands of public or private operators These findings suggest a more pragmatic and selective approach to the focus on PPI as a source of finance and more focus on the array of some of the fundamental steps among them strengthening the public finances of cities to improve both the capacity to deliver services and to reduce the risks that private investors must take when they invest in urban infrastructure Urban Infrastructure Finance Royston A. C. Brockman, Allen Williams, 1996

Philip Van Ryneveld, 2006 Abstract Since South Africa held its first democratic elections in 1994 it has given significant attention to building an effective system of decentralization including provincial and local government While provincial governments are responsible mainly for the implementation of social services such as health and education the provision of much of the urban infrastructure is the responsibility of local government Although many challenges remain the country has made significant progress over the past decade in addressing urban service backlogs in poor areas At the same time it has greatly improved macroeconomic fundamentals The system of financing local government seeks to place accountability firmly at the local level with most revenues in the larger urban centers raised locally through a combination of local taxes and fees for services while poorer regions are predominantly grant funded The objective has been to encourage the financing of capital infrastructure through local borrowing based on sustainable transparent local finances rather than national repayment guarantees which are outlawed There is some indirect subsidization of loans through the state owned Development Bank of Southern Africa But the emphasis is on achieving redistribution through transparent formula based grants paid directly from national to local governments While further bedding down of the system is needed the approach is proving largely successful The paper concludes by recommending that the existing division between provinces as providers of social services and local governments as the key locus of responsibility for services related to the built environment should be strengthened particularly through the devolution of more urban transport related functions A number of key risks are also highlighted including issues related to the reform of local business taxes

The Fiscal Framework and Urban Infrastructure Finance in China Ming Su, Quanhao Zhao, 2006 China has experienced more than 25 years of extraordinary economic growth Underlying this growth has been a decentralized fiscal system in which provinces and large cities are given the freedom to make infrastructure investments to stimulate local development and are allowed to retain a large part of the fiscal revenues that are generated from economic activity Although successful as a growth strategy this policy created two problems for national fiscal management First it significantly reduced the central government's share of fiscal revenues which fell from 34.8 percent in 1980 to 22 percent in 1992 Second it widened economic and fiscal disparities between the rapidly growing urban coastal region and the rest of the country Rapid growth in subnational debt which rose 23 fold in a decade and subnational nonperforming loans estimated by the authors to range between US 100 billion and US 150 billion has placed pressure on China's financial system Traditionally China has favored bank lending as a source of finance because the banking system has provided a vehicle for central political control over local debt But as China's financial system matures creditworthiness standards must become more important The authors recommend greater use of the revenue streams from infrastructure assets as a financing source and gradual relaxation of central political control over subnational debt One step in this direction would permit leading cities to issue municipal bonds based on objective financial standards
