Body Image as a correlate of generalized anxiety and depression among South African adolescents Gary Elliott, 2011-09-07 Doctoral Thesis Dissertation from the year 2011 in the subject Psychology Developmental Psychology Atlantic International University language English abstract The main objective of this study was to conduct an empirical investigation to gather information from adolescents in the Pretoria area as to their level of body image dissatisfaction anxiety and depression This information was used to identify whether correlations exist between these three variables for South African youth A literature study was conducted and the following hypotheses were developed for study I Adolescent females report higher more severe levels of body image dissatisfaction than males II Depression rates among South African adolescents have a female to male ratio of 2:1 III Depression prevalence rates among South African adolescents are lower than their American counterparts IV Adolescent females display higher levels of anxiety than their male counterparts V A significant positive correlation exists between levels of body image dissatisfaction and levels of depression VI A significant positive correlation exists between levels of body image dissatisfaction and feelings of anxiety VII

There is a significant positive correlation between levels of depression and anxiety in South African adolescents. The gathering of quantitative data took the form of a structured questionnaire comprising four distinct sections: demographic information, the Body Image Satisfaction scale, the Choate Depression Inventory for Children (CDIC), and the Hospital Anxiety and Depression (HAD) scale. The questionnaire was administered to Grade 8-12 learners aged 13-19 years old at three different high schools in the area, both independent and public schools. The sample group was randomly selected and yielded 350 completed questionnaires.

Evaluating and Treating Adolescent Suicide Attempters Anthony Spirito, James C. Overholser, 2003. Evaluating and Treating Adolescent Suicide Attempters provides a comprehensive overview of the emotional, behavioral, and cognitive characteristics of adolescents who have attempted suicide. Each chapter opens with a case study vignette from the author's extensive clinical files, followed by a summary of the empirical literature. Assessment and treatment practices close each chapter. While suicide is the third largest killer of adolescents, most suicide attempts do not result in death. Therefore, the treatment of the suicide attempter following the attempt becomes a significant part of the clinician's work with these adolescents. Moreover, the precursors and behavioral markers for a suicide attempt become important signals for the school counselor, youth worker, or therapist. This book also includes assessment measures to use when evaluating an adolescent who has attempted suicide. Includes an outline form of an assessment battery for adolescents who have attempted suicide. Analyzes and discusses treatment and case studies. Presents detailed descriptions of specific therapy techniques useful with adolescents who attempt suicide. Includes succinct reviews of the literature, ways to measure relevant factors related to suicidal behavior, tips for clinicians, and reviews of pertinent assessment measures.

Family Communication and Treatment Benefit in a Comparative Efficacy Trial for Depressed and Suicidal Adolescents Abigail Zisk, 2018. Although parent and adolescent reports of the family environment have been found to moderate depressed and suicidal adolescents' response to treatment, much less is known about how observations of family interactions moderate treatment response. The current study examined baseline parent-adolescent communication using the Goal-Corrected Partnership in Adolescence Coding System (GPACS; Lyons, Ruth, Hennighausen, Holmes, 2005) along with parent and adolescent reports of family environment. These pre-treatment family variables were tested as potential moderators of treatment response in a comparative efficacy trial of Attachment-Based Family Therapy (ABFT) and Family-Enhanced Non-Directive Supportive Therapy (FENST). One hundred and twenty-nine adolescents (82.9% female) were randomized to the two sixteen-week treatments. Adolescents who engaged in less cooperative and validating interactions with their parents reported greater reductions in depressive symptoms than adolescents who engaged in more cooperative and validating interactions with their parents. Rates of change in depressive symptoms were not moderated by treatment condition or by parent and adolescent reports of family conflict and cohesion. Implications for using observational assessments to identify adolescents most likely to benefit from ABFT and FENST are discussed.
