

4. When you are a floating note, drag hiding and show (see Figure 1.1).

As you type in OneNote, a small gray frame appears around the text you type. These frames are called note containers. They are only visible while you type or fix up the text within them, or while you mouse the mouse over them. Think of note containers as little helpers that make it easier for you to line up text and objects on your page. They don't show up when you print a page or share a page with someone else's mail.

You can make a note container by clicking the tiny Resize arrow shown on the right side of the frame's top handle and then dragging the mouse to the left or to the right to make the container smaller or larger. This lets you quickly adjust the wrapping of text, the way a text box would in a page layout program. For example, to make a long, continuous paragraph of text easier to read and format, you could make it note container narrower to make a column in a newspaper or magazine.

If a note container doesn't appear quite where you want it, you can freely move it around on the page by clicking its top handle (marked with a short row of small circles) and then dragging the container to the position on the page you want.

SHOW ME Media 1.1—Using Notes in OneNote

Watch the video for a tour of your updated third edition of <http://aka.ms/onenotenews>

Note containers can be copied and pasted, deleted, or dragged and merged into other note containers on the page. This kind of flexibility makes OneNote ideal for brainstorming, summarizing new ideas that are still changing, and taking notes and planning projects that will change when new time (such as the outline for this book, for example, which I created entirely in OneNote).

You can type all of your notes into a single note container or click around the WIP and create several different note containers and then line them up the way you want. It's up to you.

5. For extra interest, you don't want note containers to be dragged around your text, you can easily turn them off. Click the File tab, and then click Options. In the OneNote Options dialog box that opens, click the Display category, and then deselect the Show note containers on pages when I'm editing checkbox. Although you can't move entire blocks of text around on the page anymore when note containers are hidden, you can still make individual text paragraphs. To do this, mouse over any line of text and then click the tiny handle arrow now that appears to the left of that paragraph. Once selected, drag the text to a different location on the page. You can also select multiple paragraphs and then move them all at once by dragging the selection to the location you want. If you make a mistake, click the Undo button on the Quick Access Toolbar (or press Ctrl+Z) and then click redo to go back to the way it was, and then try again.

LET ME TRY IT

Copying and Pasting Text

Aside from typing, one of the easiest ways to bring information into OneNote is by copying text from any file, document, or web page and pasting it on your notes page. You probably already know how to do this, but OneNote 2010 has a few new paste options that give you greater control over the ways that copied information from can appear in your notebook.

To copy and paste text, follow these steps:

1. In OneNote, on any notes page, select a line of text.
2. On the Home tab, in the Clipboard group, click Copy (or press Ctrl+C on your keyboard) to copy your text selection. This keyboard shortcut is a standard Windows shortcut, so if you want to copy text from another document or program, select the text there and then press Ctrl+C before switching to OneNote.
3. In OneNote, click in a blank part of the notes page where you want to paste the copied selection of text.
4. On the Home tab, in the Clipboard group, click the small downward-facing arrow under the large Paste button to reveal additional choices.

At this point, OneNote presents you with a small menu of four ways that you can click (see Figure 1.2).
