ANALYSIS The authors' conclusions are based on a review of the literature and a survey of 100 health-care providers. The authors conclude that the current practice of using a single, non-specific, and non-validated screening tool for all patients is not optimal. They recommend the use of a validated, multi-domain screening tool that is tailored to the patient's risk factors and the provider's clinical judgment.

■ RESEARCH DESIGN This study involved a questionnaire survey of 100 respondents, which was conducted in a public library in Hong Kong. The respondents were asked to complete a questionnaire about their use of the library's electronic resources. The questionnaire was distributed to the respondents by the library staff, and the respondents were given 10 minutes to complete it. The questionnaire was then collected by the library staff, and the responses were analysed.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was designed to be low-intensity and supervised. The program was evaluated using a series of physical and psychological measures. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The walking program significantly improved the women's physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory. The walking program also had a positive effect on the women's quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a series of tests including a 1000m run, a 15m shuttle run, a 1min sit-up test, a 1min plank test, and a 1min side plank test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all tests at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.
