an individual's level of self-esteem. These results suggest that the tendency to believe that one's self-esteem is based on the number of likes or comments on one's posts may be a contributing factor to the use of social media. This finding is consistent with previous research that has shown that self-esteem is a key factor in the use of social media (e.g., Wang, 2014; Wang & Wang, 2015). For example, Wang (2014) found that individuals with higher self-esteem are more likely to use social media to express their opinions and feelings. Similarly, Wang and Wang (2015) found that individuals with higher self-esteem are more likely to use social media to interact with others. These findings suggest that individuals who use social media to boost their self-esteem may be more likely to use it to express their opinions and feelings, and to interact with others.

It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design. Therefore, the causal relationships between the variables cannot be definitively established. Future research should employ longitudinal designs to investigate the temporal relationships between the variables and to assess the impact of interventions aimed at reducing the risk of falls in the elderly.
