

The Nervous System

The nervous system

The nervous system is composed of two integrated subdivisions: an extensive peripheral nervous system, which extends throughout the body, and a central nervous system, which is located in the head and spine.

The CNS includes the brain and spinal cord, which are connected by the brainstem. The brainstem is the part of the CNS that connects the brain to the spinal cord. It is composed of the midbrain, pons, and medulla oblongata. The brainstem is responsible for many vital functions, including breathing, heart rate, and blood pressure.

The peripheral nervous system (PNS) consists of all the nerves that are not part of the CNS. It includes the cranial nerves, which emerge from the brain, and the spinal nerves, which emerge from the spinal cord. The PNS is responsible for transmitting information between the CNS and the rest of the body.

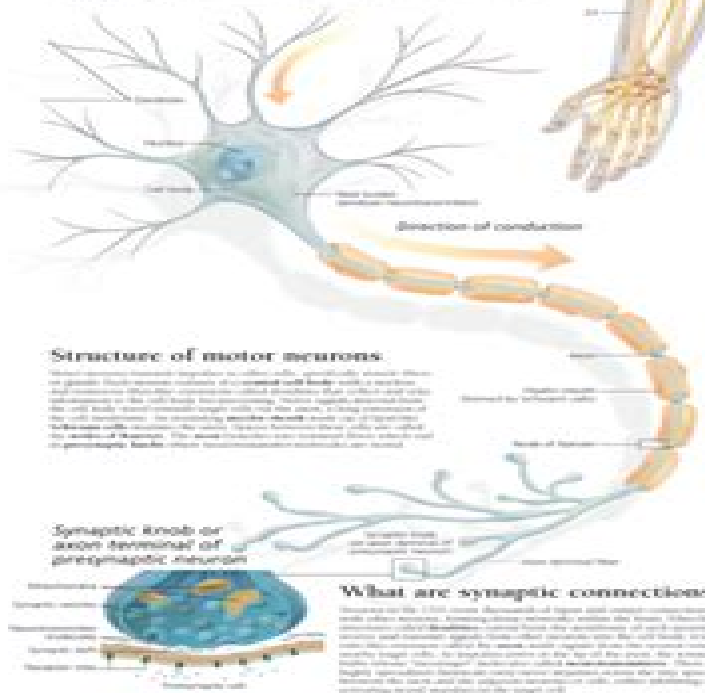

The nervous system is a complex system that allows the body to respond to its environment. It is made up of billions of neurons, which are specialized cells that transmit information. The neurons are connected by a network of fibers, which allows them to communicate with each other.

Spinal cord

The spinal cord and nerves

The spinal cord is a long, thin, tube-like structure that runs from the base of the brain down to the lower back. It is made up of many segments, each of which is connected to a pair of spinal nerves. The spinal cord is responsible for transmitting information between the brain and the rest of the body. It also controls many of the body's involuntary functions, such as breathing and heart rate.

Structure of motor neurons

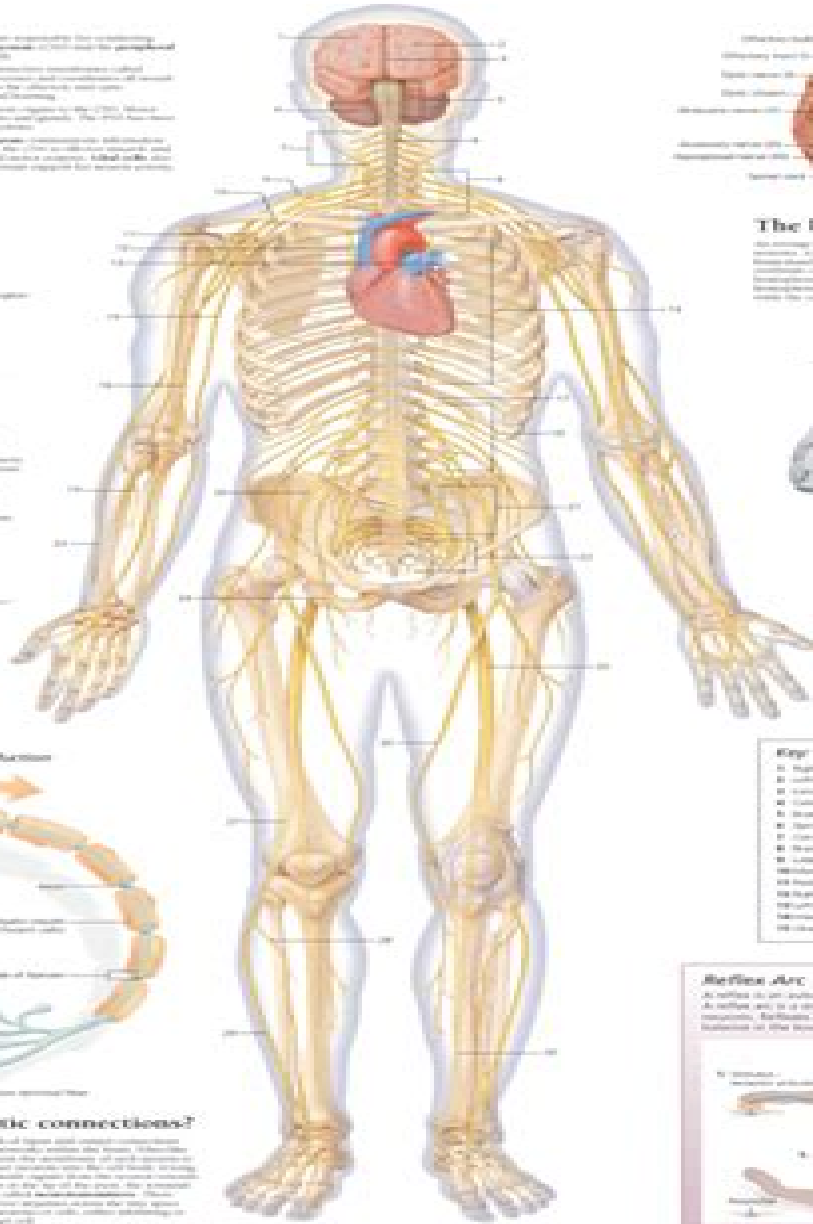

Motor neurons are specialized cells that transmit information from the brain to the muscles. They are made up of a cell body, which contains the nucleus, and a long, thin tail called an axon. The axon is covered by a myelin sheath, which helps to speed up the transmission of information. The axon ends in a synaptic knob, which is where it connects to a muscle.

Synaptic knob or axon terminal of presynaptic neuron

What are synaptic connections?

Synaptic connections are the points where two neurons meet and communicate. They are made up of a presynaptic neuron, which releases neurotransmitters, and a postsynaptic neuron, which receives them. The neurotransmitters bind to receptors on the postsynaptic neuron, which causes it to fire and transmit information to the next neuron.

The brain

The brain is the central part of the nervous system. It is made up of the cerebrum, cerebellum, and brainstem. The cerebrum is the largest part of the brain and is responsible for many of the body's higher functions, such as thinking, feeling, and voluntary movement. The cerebellum is smaller and is responsible for coordination and balance. The brainstem is the part of the brain that connects the cerebrum to the spinal cord.

Reflex Arc

A reflex is an automatic, involuntary response to internal or external stimuli. A reflex arc is a simple and specific type of neural pathway that allows the body to respond quickly to stimuli. It is made up of a sensory neuron, which carries information from the stimulus to the brain, and a motor neuron, which carries information from the brain to the muscle.
