2. Epigenetic factors influence gene expression
3. Environmental factors influence development
4. Cellular differentiation
5. Morphogenesis (organismal development)

Genetics

Genetic blueprint (DNA) provides instructions for development, which is influenced by epigenetic factors (e.g., methylation, histone modification) and environmental factors (e.g., nutrition, stress, toxins).

Epigenetic factors influence gene expression and cellular differentiation, which in turn influence the development of the organism (e.g., morphology, physiology, behavior).

Epigenetic factors influence gene expression and cellular differentiation, which in turn influence the development of the organism (e.g., morphology, physiology, behavior).

Environmental factors influence gene expression and cellular differentiation, which in turn influence the development of the organism (e.g., morphology, physiology, behavior).

Epigenetic factors influence gene expression and cellular differentiation.

Environmental factors influence gene expression and cellular differentiation.
