

Understanding Schizophrenia

Schizophrenia is a complex illness that often begins when a person is in his or her late teens or early 20s. As with any illness, the symptoms can differ from person to person and can change over time. When the disease is active, most patients experience the hallmark symptoms of psychosis in the form of delusions and hallucinations. When the disease is inactive, most patients still experience trouble with concentration and motivation.

What Causes Schizophrenia?

Genes and Environment: While schizophrenia is thought to be caused by a combination of genetic and environmental factors, the exact cause is still unknown. Research suggests that genetic factors may play a role, as people with a family history of the disease are more likely to develop it. Environmental factors, such as prenatal complications, birth complications, and exposure to toxins, may also contribute to the development of the disease. It is also possible that a combination of genetic and environmental factors is responsible for the disease.

- Genetic Risk: Schizophrenia is a complex illness that often begins when a person is in his or her late teens or early 20s. As with any illness, the symptoms can differ from person to person and can change over time. When the disease is active, most patients experience the hallmark symptoms of psychosis in the form of delusions and hallucinations. When the disease is inactive, most patients still experience trouble with concentration and motivation.
- Environmental Risk: While schizophrenia is thought to be caused by a combination of genetic and environmental factors, the exact cause is still unknown. Research suggests that genetic factors may play a role, as people with a family history of the disease are more likely to develop it. Environmental factors, such as prenatal complications, birth complications, and exposure to toxins, may also contribute to the development of the disease. It is also possible that a combination of genetic and environmental factors is responsible for the disease.
- Brain Chemistry: Research suggests that the brain chemistry of people with schizophrenia is different from that of people without the disease. Specifically, there is an imbalance in the levels of certain chemicals, such as dopamine, in the brain. This imbalance is thought to be responsible for the symptoms of the disease.
- Brain Structure: Research suggests that the brain structure of people with schizophrenia is different from that of people without the disease. Specifically, there is an enlargement of the ventricles in the brain, which is thought to be responsible for the symptoms of the disease.

Symptoms of Schizophrenia Fall into Four Broad Categories

Positive Symptoms

- Hallucinations are perceptions of things that aren't really there (seeing things, hearing voices, smelling odors, feeling sensations, or feeling touch). People with schizophrenia often experience these perceptions in a way that is very different from the way that most people experience them. The perceptions may be very vivid and may be accompanied by strong emotions, such as fear or anger.
- Delusions are beliefs that are not based on reality. People with schizophrenia often have delusions that are very different from the way that most people believe things. The delusions may be very strong and may be accompanied by strong emotions, such as fear or anger.
- Disorganized speech is a symptom that is common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often speak in a way that is very different from the way that most people speak. The speech may be very disorganized and may be accompanied by strong emotions, such as fear or anger.

Negative Symptoms

- The "flat" expression that most people with schizophrenia have is a negative symptom. It is a lack of emotional expression, which is a common symptom of the disease.
- A lack of interest in activities that most people find interesting is another negative symptom. People with schizophrenia often have a lack of interest in activities that most people find interesting.
- A lack of motivation to do things that most people find motivating is another negative symptom. People with schizophrenia often have a lack of motivation to do things that most people find motivating.

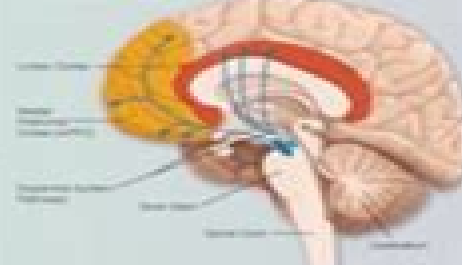

Mixed Symptoms

- Disorganized thinking is a symptom that is common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a disorganized way of thinking, which is a common symptom of the disease.
- Disorganized behavior is a symptom that is common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a disorganized way of behaving, which is a common symptom of the disease.
- Disorganized speech is a symptom that is common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a disorganized way of speaking, which is a common symptom of the disease.

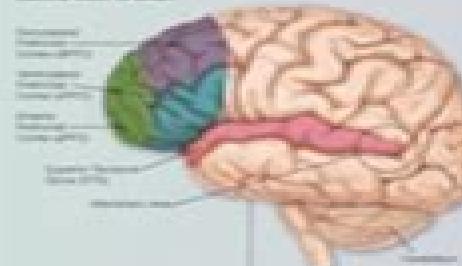

Cognitive Symptoms

- Problems with attention and concentration are common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a hard time paying attention to things that most people find interesting.
- Problems with memory are common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a hard time remembering things that most people find interesting.
- Problems with decision-making are common in schizophrenia. People with schizophrenia often have a hard time making decisions that most people find interesting.
