Youth Development Physical Activity Linking Univcommunities:

Youth Development and Physical Activity Donald R. Hellison, 2000 Professionals in educational and recreational settings work hard to understand and address the problems faced by underserved youth Yet the dedicated people in these institutions are often limited in what they can achieve because they tend to remain within the confines of their own work environment rather than sharing their expertise and resources Instead of accepting this as an unfortunate fact of life the coauthors of this book see the situation as an opportunity to develop an approach in which the whole is far greater than the sum of its parts In Youth Development and Physical Activity Linking Universities and Communities they draw on their considerable teaching experience to present innovative new ways to serve underserved youth The book describes practical strategies for breaking down the walls between universities and communities so they can combine their strengths to improve young people s lives You ll find a wealth of guidelines for creating physical activity programs that instill a sense of social and personal responsibility including numerous real life examples of successful programs Youth Development and Physical Activity Linking Universities and Communities is divided into four parts each enriched with the colorful voices and stories of real kids and youth leaders who have put these ideas into practice Part I provides a sobering look at the challenges today s young people face and introduces positive ways to improve physical activity youth programs so they re meaningful in today s world In Part II you ll learn how to move from how it is to how it could be using a breakthrough model for working with kids and building programs Here the book provides a road map that shows the way for university students and faculty to connect with youth in their communities through service learning internships and other outreach programs Part III spells out how to develop a variety of proven youth physical activity programs from adventure experiences and Coaching Clubs to mentoring and teen parent programs You ll find many great ideas that work in virtually any setting including public schools alternative schools recreation programs youth service groups and social agencies Part IV provides a variety of helpful tools for evaluating programs and improving outcomes as well as insights on how professionals can develop the skills they need to respond to the changing demands on youth leaders Written by professionals with a combined 70 years of experience working with underserved youth this book is must reading for both professionals and organizations practicing in a world where youth too often slip through the cracks It provides a clear and hopeful framework for improving the lives of kids as well as the communities in which they live Before and After School Physical Activity Programs Risto Marttinen, Erin E.

Malina This book addresses relevant issues within the scope of organized sports Chapters are written by distinguished contributors with a comprehensive list of topics that under the coordination the leadership and expertise of the editors provided the scientific literature with an unique and in depth analysis of social biological cultural and related interactions This book is published by the renowned University of Coimbra The same University that only a short time ago began to offer a course in Physical Education and Sport under the intellectual and scientific leadership of Francisco Sobral Leal His work in Portugal is both unique and pioneering Here he has been able to be influential This book due to its quality and the nature of its topics is thus a fine tribute to his work and culture of interaction A tribute of science in the name of knowledge Luis Bettencourt Sardinha Making the Connection ,2011 While each student is unique with different fitness needs all students can benefit from meaningful access to regular physical activity It is critical that policy makers consider the importance of physical activity for young people when addressing issues concerning academic performance by Improving the quality and amount of physical education and physical activity in schools and providing opportunities for students to engage in physical activity outside of classroom time Relationship quality, engagement, hope, self-worth, and health-risk behaviors in a physical activity-based positive youth development program Shaina Cole Riciputi,2016 Linking Parental Support and Parental Control to Physical Activity Participation in Youth Erin Katherine Wing,2015 The PULSE Program Bryce Barker,2014 The purpose of this doctoral thesis was to develop implement and evaluate the PULSE program a community based physical activity and life skills program for at risk youth The thesis is composed of four articles The first paper describes the rationale and development of the PULSE program which was designed to help youth develop the skills to self regulate and successfully perform physical activity The second article presents a process evaluation of the PULSE program This article examines how the youth progressed through the program with regards to the five levels of the Teaching and Social Responsibility TPSR model one of the frameworks on which the PULSE program is based A second purpose of this study was to understand the youths perceptions of the impact of the program on these five levels The results indicated that the program led to slight increases in the five levels of the TPSR model and the youth reported transferring the skills they learned related to the levels in their lives outside of the program The third paper represents an outcome evaluation of the PULSE program Results showed that youth who participated in PULSE increased their fitness physical activity levels as well as a number of positive youth development outcomes Finally the fourth paper examined how the PULSE program helps support the tenets of Basic Needs Theory The results indicated that the program successfully nurtured the three basic needs of autonomy competence and relatedness The overall findings suggest that the PULSE program is a practical evidence informed program that may help youth understand and apply life skills to be physically active as they approach adulthood and also more generally in their lives The current findings show promise for both Physical Activity PA and Positive Youth Development PYD outcomes but further research is needed to make causal links Utilizing Technology to Increase Youth

Engagement Towards Physical Activity Deborah Simone Fetter, 2018 Engaging in regular activity during childhood contributes to better cardiorespiratory fitness and a greater likelihood of being active in adulthood Yet few youth in the United States meet the United States Department of Health and Human Services Physical Activity Guidelines for Americans recommendation of 60 minutes of moderate to vigorous activity MVPA per day Concomitantly the prevalence of childhood obesity remains alarmingly high in the United States with 31.8% of youth classified as overweight or obese There are a multitude of factors that contribute to the development of obesity including physical activity patterns Engaging in regular physical activity has been associated with a wide range of health benefits including improving body composition The school setting has been postulated to be a desirable place to promote physical activity because youth spend a large portion of their day in school and have the chance to expend up to half of their daily energy However the opportunities for youth to be physically active have been declining as physical education programs continue to be eliminated and recess time shortened in schools Additionally the availability of technology has increased in recent years and made engaging in sedentary behaviors such as playing video games and watching TV more accessible Yet there is potential in incorporating technology related to exercise into school based programs to generate interest in physical activity Further there are many determinants of physical activity to target for effective interventions including physiological psychological sociocultural and environmental factors Investigating how we can target these determinants in obesity prevention programs can lead to a greater understanding of how to encourage youth to develop lifelong physical activity habits The overall objective of this research was to investigate how utilizing technology in the school based multicomponent nutrition program the Shaping Healthy Choices Program SHCP can help increase youth engagement towards physical activity The first objective of this research was to determine the impact of the SHCP on physical activity patterns in a sub sample of fourth grade youth Physical activity has been shown to have a wide range of beneficial health effects yet few youth meet the United States physical activity recommendation To address the increased prevalence of childhood obesity the SHCP was developed based on principles of the Social Cognitive Theory SCT and the Dietary Guidelines for Americans 2010 adaption of the Social Ecological Model The program was implemented over nine months among fourth grade youth One intervention school and one control school within the same Northern California school district were selected to participate in this sub study At pre and post intervention assessments youth wore a PolarActive monitor on their non dominant wrist 24 h d for at least 2 consecutive days Multiple linear regression was used to evaluate change in physical activity by adjusting for covariates and other potential confounders including ethnicity race household income and sex Statistical significance was set at p < 0.05
