

shared the seas with warships from England and France. Both English and French warships tried to stop American ships from reaching their enemy's ports. England did not want Americans to sell France supplies that might help France win the war. France felt the same way about American ships reaching English ports. Therefore, both countries began attacking American ships.

This made the Americans very angry. It looked as though war could break out with both countries. However, the United States signed a treaty with England in 1794. England agreed to remove its warships from the northeast coast of the United States. The United States also signed a treaty with France.

More and more, the United States realized it would have to be strong to get along in the world.

PRACTICE 21: Threats of War

Decide if each statement below is true (T) or false (F). Write the correct letter on the line before each statement.

- _____ 1. If a country remains neutral in a war, it joins forces with the weaker country.
- _____ 2. Americans continued to trade with both England and France while the two countries were at war with each other.
- _____ 3. America had to pay a fine to England if it wanted to trade with France.

The Louisiana Purchase

The next problem for the United States involved the Mississippi River. Settlers in the Northwest Territory used the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to get their farm goods to markets in the East. These rivers were the only way for farmers to move their crops. There were very few roads. And the roads that did exist were useless for heavy loads.

The Mississippi River was also very important because it emptied into the Gulf of Mexico. The river met the Gulf at the port of New Orleans.
