

Introduction to Wave Mechanics

Dedication SIR HORACE LAMB

Sir Horace Lamb (1849–1934) is best known for his extremely thorough and well-written book, Hydrodynamics, which first appeared in 1879 and has been reprinted numerous times. It still serves as a compendium of useful information as well as the source for a great number of papers and books. If this present book has but a small fraction of the appeal of Hydrodynamics, the authors would be well satisfied.

Sir Horace Lamb was born in Stockport, England in 1849, educated at Owens College, Manchester, and then Trinity College, Cambridge University, where he studied with professors such as J. Clerk Maxwell and G. G. Stokes. After his graduation, he lectured at Trinity (1872–1875) and then moved to Adelaide, Australia, to become Professor of Mathematics.

After ten years, he returned to Owens College (part of Victoria University of Manchester) as Professor of Pure Mathematics; he remained until 1920.

Professor Lamb was noted for his excellent teaching and writing abilities. In response to a student tribute on the occasion of his eightieth birthday, he replied: "I did try to make things clear, first to myself . . . and then to my students, and somehow make these dry bones live."

His research areas encompassed tides, waves, and earthquake properties as well as mathematics.
