Gaillard, 2025-04 Frye Gaillard did not set out to write this book One day as he was thumbing through a cardboard box of his essays columns and profiles he simply realized that he had done it Each article told the story of a person standing against social injustice or exploring the pain and ambiguity of the human condition By blending interviews and stories of well known figures like Archbishop Desmond Tutu Sidney Poitier Vine Deloria Mikhail Gorbachev and Jane Goodall with lesser known heroes like Rabbi Abraham Heschel who marched from Selma to Montgomery Regina Benjamin a Black doctor who was integral to the grassroots efforts of Katrina recovery Kathy Mattea who wrote powerful songs about coal mining and its real effects on the people of Appalachia and Elyn Saks who pioneered modern mental illness treatments while dealing with her own schizophrenia Gaillard celebrates the people who have tried to make things better While many of Gaillard's subjects succeeded in what they were trying to do others did not Each story however contains a measure of inspiration Against the backdrop of our turbulent time our era of lesser angels on the rise Gaillard asks where would the rest of us be without them
